Where will China's largest battery factory be located? Last week, the Chinese battery company Shanghai Putailai New Energy Technology (PTL) announced its plans to establish a factory in Northern Sweden, just outside Timra with the aim to build Europe's largest facility for the manufacture of anode materials. What happened to SEK 13 billion battery anode factory? Plans for a SEK 13 billion large battery anode factory in Timra, north of Sundsvall, have been entirely scrapped, according to Dagens Industri. The China-owned company Shanghai Putailai (PTL) was expected to employ 1,900 people. Swedish battery manufacturer Northvolt was among the potential customers. Why is Zichen Sweden launching a new battery plant? The facility was intended to strengthen PTL's position in the European battery supply chain, with the first phase targeting 50,000 tons of capacity with projections showing further cost reductions by 2030. In December, the Swedish government proposed conditions related to Zichen Sweden's ownership, management structure, intellectual property rights, and regulatory arrangements. How will a new battery factory strengthen the battery ecosystem in Europe? The establishment of this factory is therefore welcome news for strengthening the battery ecosystem in Europe. The facility is expected to have an annual production capacity 50,000 tonnes of anode materials in a first phase that can be expanded to 100,000 tonnes during the second phase of the establishment. Why is Europe focusing on batteries? Europe has made batteries one of the main focuses of its industrial policy, aiming to develop a homegrown sector to challenge the dominant Asian players. Anodes make up the second-biggest component market for electric vehicle batteries.
